Saturday last a Lewiston farmer and cooper of West Bolton, aged seventy eight, while in his usual health, died while putting some wood into the stove.

A meeting of the citizens of Sabattus and Lewiston and Mills has been called for Saturday, January 12, to consider arrangements for asking the present legislature for a city charter for the two villages.

Steamer Vanguard of the Dominion line arrived in Portland Monday evening, after a good passage of eleven days. She had twenty six steerage, five intermediate and three cabin passengers and a cargo of 2 [illegible] tons.

Sunday October 21 at 11 [illegible] belonging in Bath fell into the water off Stuart's and while Portland Thomas Reid jumped in at the risk of his own life and saved the old gentleman. Saturday Mr Reid received an elegant bronze medal suitably inscribed from the Massachusetts Humane Society.

Last Saturday Miss Nan Buskirk a young lady employed at the gingham mill at Skowhegan had her dress caught in the machinery and but for her friends being so prompt in answering her screams for help the result might have been a serious accident. As it was it was a very narrow escape for the young lady.

Monday morning, Mr John Foster, aged about fifty five years, porter for W H Milliken & Co left his house on Green street for the store, and went to Martin Brett's to order some provisions. While there he felt an attack of heart disease to which he is said to be subject coming on and started back home. He got as far as LeGrow's on Preble street and there sat down on a step. He was seen and taken into LeGrow's where he had just time to tell who he was and where he lived when he expired. Mr Foster was a very reliable man. He leaves a family.

The town and citizens committees held a meeting at Lewis Hall, Thursday Saturday evening, to see what is their respective views were. I B Chapman called the meeting to order and in general terms the ground already gone over in the Press was recapitulated. One gentleman proposed an enabling bill from the legislature whereby the citizens can vote for or against a change or for a city charter or annexation. Dr Toplift, Messrs Hopkins, Sparrow, Kelley, Scott and Chase were in favor annexation provided favorable terms could be made with the city of Portland and Dr Pickard was especially pronounced against annexation.

Hancock

The Ellsworth Inter is now occupying its new office having every needed facility for doing work including electric power for driving its press. The Amer pan has a good hold and complaint would not well.

The big [illegible] was sold at Hancock last week by United States Marshal Harmon to Jonesport parties for $2 25. She was formerly the British brig Shamrock but is at Prince Edwards Island in 1867.

Mr [illegible] of East Wilton writes that the man called sawyer, convicted of the assault on Mr Frost of Winthrop, is an old convict whose real name is Harry Austin.

The selectmen of China are to offer a reward of fifty dollars for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who broke into the store of A B Fletcher in China village.

A lady in Benton aroused from her bed while asleep one night, recently, and ran half a mile to a neighbor's house before waking. Her husband pursued her as fast as he could but was unable to overtake her until she arrived at the neighbor's house.

Mr Beniah Benjamin, of Whitefield, died in that town December 28, at the age of ninety eight years ten months and twenty one days. Mr Benjamin was born in Roxbury, Mass., February 7th, 1790. His parents moved to Livermore Falls, when he was four years old where he resided till nineteen. He then bought a wild tract of land in Whitefield. Crossing the Kennebec in Gardiner, he proceeded thirteen miles, by blazed trees, to his land. He was one of Whitefield's first settlers.

Miss Laura Hall, of Randolph, narrowly escaped a bad accident, Monday forenoon. In trying to board Jewett's train from the east side of the track, she slipped, and a gentleman on the cars caught her just as she fell from the train, which was moving at the time. Miss Hall was dragged nearly a rod, when the man released his hold, and she dropped, rolling down the side of the embankment to the fence. She was somewhat shaken up but was otherwise uninjured.

The superintendent of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures at Paris has directed that a critical examination be made of the results obtained from the experiments of Prof Rogers of Colby, during the last two years. This examination is for the purpose of ascertaining whether his conclusion is correct, namely, that the relative co-efficient of expansion between iron and steel is constant for all temperature between the limits minus 18 degrees and plus 95 degrees temperature.

On Saturday, a tramp made an unsuccessful attempt to swindle Mrs E. C. Burleigh, the governor's wife, out of five dollars. The man entered the door-yard of the Burleigh residence on Grove street, Augusta, and seeing the governor's little daughter, said to her, "I know you I want to see the governor," and proceeding to the front door inquired for the Governor. He was told that Mr Burleigh was probably at the State House and departing was gone about long enough to reach the capitol and return when he appeared at the door of Mr Burleigh's house. Meeting Mrs. Burleigh there he said the Governor had given orders that she should give him five dollars. She regarded his statement with suspicion, and went to the telephone to converse with the Governor about the matter, but hardly had she left the doorway when the tramp took to his heels and departed. A description of the man was given to the police and later that night he was arrested and placed in jail. He is a bad looking fellow, ragged and dirty, and resisted the officer who made the arrest.

John Mulbury, wanted in Middleton Mass for breaking and entering has been arrested at Rockland.

Camden is to have a new post office. It will be located in the new Knights block. It will be fitted up with all the new improvements and will be ready for occupancy next week.

The lime business of Camden and Rockport imported from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia during 1888, over 7,000 cord of kiln wood.

H M Bean a Camden ship builder has completed and sent to Virginia, the moulds for the five three masted schooners. The others will follow soon. All three of his vessels have sold Virginia oak frames.

The Rockland Courier Gazette says that Gilson wharf bivalve of that place has the average of the fishing fleet. She has two kittens, and last week she came to the conclusion that she would show them some of the world. Accordingly she carried them aboard the Bluehill and made a trip to Surry remaining at that place over night and returning home she carried her children ashore, apparently much pleased with her trip.

Penobscot

Friday evening the regular meeting of the Bath Board of Trade was held in City Hall. The annual banquet of the board was arranged to take place on the second Tuesday of next month. The matter of making all toll bridges in the county of Sagadahoc free and the property of the county was fully discussed, and a petition to that effect will be presented to the legislature this winter.

In the spring the present Bath Iron Works will be removed to the southern division of the plant formerly the Goss & Sawyer Marine Works where new buildings will be erected in connection with those in there so that the metal can go in at one end in the rough and pig iron and come out at the other in finished engine. This removal will bring about a great saving in cost of the engine.

The handsome four masted schooner Douglas Dearborn launched by B Walsh was launched from the small yard in Bath Saturday forenoon. She is the finest model copper bottomed a double deck four masted schooner. She is 156 feet in length 34 feet beam 18 feet depth 18 feet and will carry 1,600 tons of coal. She has a working pump the first to be placed on ship board and in fact the first ever built by Capt I Hyde. It will discharge 3,000 gallons of water a minute and can be used in case of fire in case of disaster. The schooner cost from $60,000. Captain Walsh of Bath will be her commander the Carrie S Hyde. The list of officers are Derick Hardy of Bath and Mr Denny formerly the engineer, and James Frazer of Bath cook. The vessel will load at Boston for Sydney.

There were 131 children born in Calais during the past year of which sixty one were children under ten years of age.

It is rumored that Mr Warren Smith who was recently in Washington for a week or two, has recently sold a tract of timber land at a point of $80,000 says the Machias Union.

A fire was in Jonesport December 26th, in the house of Albert H Preston of Calais, which partially destroyed the roof. Mrs Preston was severely burned about the head, face and hands while trying to extinguish the fire. The loss on the building is $1 0 insured.

York

Friday, as we go to press, John F Haines wife and daughter were thrown from a carriage and badly shaken up, at Old Orchard and Mr Haines purposes to bring suit against the town, claiming that the road is in a dangerous condition.

If suitable arrangements can be made with parties with whom J R Pulsifer of Auburn is negotiating regarding the matter of starting a factory at Saco for the manufacture of cotton board counters, it is likely that Mr Pulsifer will remove his plant in Auburn to that town and will lease the building for two couples in the rear of Rock Block. Mr Pulsifer has built up a good business in Auburn, and the city will be very loth to lose him should he decide to move.

A tree on a mountain in Alpine county Cal, was struck by lightning during a thunderstorm. The fluid followed the trunk into the ground, and immediately there burst forth a brilliant fire, which has continued to burn ever since. It is believed the lightning ignited a bed of coal, which is now feeding the flame.

There will be no ice palace at St Paul this winter, the season is so mild. Besides, the idea is gaining ground that the ice palace carnival has been an injury to the State. Col Hans Mattson, Secretary of State says that the ice palace has cost the Northwest many thousand immigrants who were frightened away by the thought of what an awfully hyberborean climate Minnesota has.

There is in the Tsarkoe Selo, the Czar's palace near St Petersburg, a room known as the lapis-lazuli room, the floor of which is ebony, inlaid with mother-of-pearl. There is also an amber room, the walls of which are of the finest amber picked out to a multitude of exquisite designs. The walls of the banqueting hall are covered with gold, and its ceiling is dazzling with the same precious metal.

The beard of the Prince of Wales is growing very gray. Anglomaniacs in this country should at once abandon hair dye.

In Venezuela all manner of makeshifts have been resorted to for supplying a circulating medium. In Guanta, for example, the people have absolutely no money, and when they wish to purchase a few necessaries they steal cocoanuts by the dark of the moon and exchange them for supplies. This custom became so general and so disastrous to the fruit growers that the Alcalde was obliged to issue a decree prohibiting the use of cocoanuts as money.

The Springfield Dramatic Club played the drama entitled "Our Folks" to a good by sized audience in Dale Hall, last Friday evening. The different parts were all quite well sustained but special mention may be made of Miss Minna Edwin Moser Barr Scribner and John Dwelley who represented the characters they assumed in an exceedingly pleasing manner for amateurs.

The last play is to be produced here next Wednesday evening by local talent.

Messrs J B Clark & Co are succeeding unusually well with their bark hauling operations this winter as they have now over a thousand cords on the yard, while at this time last year they had scarcely commenced. There is considerable comment in regard to the fine class of horses that are engaged in this work. The majority of them are young and well adapted for the business. One pair came from Illinois.

Mr and Mrs M D Barnes, of Springfield were in town last Friday having come over to see their townsfolk play their drama. Mr Barnes is the principal of the high school at that place and is a gentleman of much ability.

Mr I W Porter of Lincoln was in town last Tuesday.

The Public Library

REPORT OF THE LIBRARIAN

The following report submitted to the Board of Managers of the Bangor Public Library will be of interest to our readers.

The sixth annual report of the Library is herewith respectfully submitted to the Board.

CONDITION OF THE LIBRARY

The number of volumes in the Library January 1 1888 was 24,397. To these have been added 1,886 volumes, as follows: By purchase, 1,469, gift, 133 binding periodicals and pamphlets, 182 lost book recovered 1, exchange with other libraries, 21. Total 1,996.

There have been removed thirty nine volumes—Worn out 12, lost and paid for by loser, 1, returned to publisher imperfect 1, sold to Maine State College library 1, exchanged with other libraries 19, duplicate United States documents given to other libraries, 2, charged to subscribers and not returned, 1—39. Total increase during 1888, 1,957.

Number of books in library January 1, 1889, 26,354 volumes.

The books added were classified as follows: General Works 134, Philosophy, 18, Theology 41, Sociology, 232, Philology 6, Natural Science, 56, Useful Arts, 31, Fine Arts, 51, Fiction 770, Poetry 30, Miscellaneous Literature, 42, Travels 78, Biography, 110, History, 115. Total 1,886.

CIRCULATION

The Library has been open three hundred and six days during the year. The number of books used in the Reading Room was 40,501, a gain over the preceding year of 30,501. Number issued for home use 48,456, an increase over 1887 of 7,001.

The following table gives the number of books issued each class issued for home use and Reading Room.

	Home.	Rd. R.	Total.
General Works	[illegible]	6,415	17,989
Philosophy	100	206	306
Theology	353	343	696
Sociology	420	340	760
Philology	31	106	137
Natural Science,	508	772	1,280
Useful Arts,	164	673	836
Fine Arts,	373	618	991
Fiction	34,127	22,824	57,151
Poetry	341	504	847
Misc Literature,	1,306	1,423	2,729
Travels	1,157	2,037	3,194
Biography,	188	1,050	1,238
History	961	1,903	2,864
	48,456	40,301	88,757

Total number of books delivered for home use and Reading Room, 88,757.

Works of fiction issued for home use seventy one per cent, for Reading Room fifty six per cent.

FINES AND LOSSES

In nearly every case of overdue books, one notice is sufficient to cause their return and the fines are cheerfully paid. Occasionally a second notice has been required and in three instances a messenger has been sent and the books recovered. In one case the fine and cost of sending the messenger was readily paid, but the fines and messenger charges for the other two books remain unsettled.

The income from fines has been $127 00 and $2 24 remain charged. Of the latter amount $2 32 will probably never be collected, the remainder will doubtless be paid when cards are wished for 1889.

Three books have been lost by subscribers and the price of a new book promptly paid. In two cases books were injured and the cost of re-binding paid.

One book has been lost by being carried to Patten by a member of the family of Bertram J Smith, on their removal from the city. Several notices have been sent to Patten but the book has not been returned.

SUBSCRIBERS.

The number of cards issued during the year was 1,014, an increase of forty-three over the preceding year. Seven hundred and eighty-six cards were issued before July 1st, the remaining two hundred and twenty-eight were half-yearly subscriptions. There have been twelve non-resident subscribers, one each from Glenburn and East Bradford, two from Orono and Oldtown, and six from Brewer.

CATALOGUES.

Thirty-two catalogues have been sold or otherwise disposed of. Sold to residents, 13; non-residents, 1, presented to other libraries, 10; worn out, 8. Total, 32.

READING ROOM.

That the usefulness of the Reading Room still continues to increase is shown by the record of books used. The room cannot accommodate the boys who would like to use it. It may seem hard work to grant the requests of small boys for picture books, but, when we look back to the days of the readers who are almost daily to be seen here and realize that they are the boys who wanted picture books five years ago, we can see that good work is being done for the boys of this city which it would not be right to check.

We are not troubled with rowdyism. Occasionally mischievous [illegible] but there is no remedy for [illegible] method could be devised by which the [illegible] could be [illegible] monitor.

In conclusion I would suggest that one kind of a night plan for the school [illegible] this building show strangers the location of the Library. I have frequently been told by people who wish to visit the Library to read or study, that they felt a difficulty in finding it.

Respectfully submitted

MARY H CRIBBAN, Librarian.

Bangor Jan 8th 1889.

Decisions in Law

The following decisions in law have been received by Charles J Stevens Esq editor of the Eastern Law Digest.

HANCOCK COUNTY, SS.

Juliette Blake vs. [illegible] Judgment for [illegible] could not be [illegible] overruled.

A writ of error upon the [illegible] to the plaintiff's due care it was immaterial whether another thought that under the same circumstances he would have [illegible] the accident.

When a town neglects to have its surveyors of highways at the annual town meeting in March, and does not appoint the municipal officers to be such surveyors the old surveyors hold over until the first day of May following. [illegible] sec. 11.

An appointment by the municipal officers of highway surveyors cannot be effected till May first following the annual town meeting and such appointment is illegally made if made before the first day of May.

The first requested instruction was correct as an abstract proposition and could not have misled the jury under the issue and the error was prejudicial in being withheld.

The path of the [illegible] in question had already been [illegible] language. It was the province of the judge to define the language of the report to the jury.

The evidence in the case is not reported but fully considered. The judge strongly stated the view of the proper rule to be established by the jury, and [illegible] in support of the proposition.

While we might have differed from the jury on some of the issues we are convinced that the jury was not [illegible] wrong.

PENOBSCOT COUNTY.

Melvin Holmes in Equity vs. [illegible] claim of claim. Complaint [illegible] against the [illegible] to [illegible] lien upon the interest from [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible]

Held—The evidence [illegible] to establish the respondent's claim [illegible] the mortgage [illegible] that the [illegible] of the property taken by the respondent under the mortgage was sufficient to pay all the notes. The respondent therefore should pay to the complainant the amount of the notes held by him and [illegible] costs.

Still his mother was not to be wearied out of her affection by all the waywardness of her boy, nor disheartened by the stories of his misdeeds with which her good friends were continually regaling her. She had, it is true, very little of the pleasure which rich people enjoy, in always hearing their children praised, but she considered all this ill will as a kind of persecution which he suffered, and she liked him the better on that account. She saw him growing up a fine, tall, good looking youngster, and she looked at him with the secret pride of a mother's heart. It was her great desire that Dolph should appear like a gentleman, and all the money she could save week towards helping out his pocket and his wardrobe. She would look out of the window after him as he sallied forth in his best array, and her heart would yearn with delight, and once, when Peter de Groodt, struck with the youngster's gallant appearance on a bright Sunday morning, observed, "Well, after all, Dolph does grow a comely fellow!" the tear of pride started into the mother's eye. "Ah, neighbor! neighbor!" exclaimed she, "they may say what they please, poor Dolph will yet hold up his head with the best of them."

Dolph Heyliger had now nearly attained his one and twentieth year, and the term of his medical studies was just expiring, yet it must be confessed that he knew little more of the profession than when he first entered the doctor's doors. This, however, could not be from want of quickness of parts, for he showed amazing aptness in mastering other branches of knowledge, which he could only have studied at intervals. He was, for instance, a sure marksman, and won all the geese and turkeys at Christmas holidays. He was a bold rider, he was famous for leaping and wrestling, he played tolerably on the fiddle, could swim like a fish, and was the best hand in the whole place at fives or nineepins.

All these accomplishments, however, procured him no favor in the eyes of the doctor, who grew more and more crabbed and intolerant the nearer the term of apprenticeship approached. Frau Hay, too, was forever finding some occasion to raise a windy tempest about his ears; an I seldom encountered him about the house without a clatter of the tongue, so that at length the jingling of her keys, as she approached, was to Dolph like the ringing of the prompter's bell, that gives notice of a theatrical thunder storm. Nothing but the infinite good humor of the heedless youngster enabled him to bear all this domestic tyranny without open rebellion. It was evident that the doctor and his housekeeper were preparing to hunt the poor youth out of the nest the moments his term should have expired, a shorthand mode which the doctor had of providing for useless disciples.

Indeed, the little man had been rendered more than usually irritable lately in consequence of various cares and vexations which his country estate had brought upon him. The doctor had been repeatedly annoyed by the rumors and tales which prevailed concerning the old mansion, and found it difficult to prevail even upon the country man and his family to remain there rent free. Every time he rode out to the farm he was teased by some fresh complaint of strange noises and fearful sights with which the tenants were disturbed at night, and the doctor would come home fretting and fuming, and vent his spleen upon the whole household. It was indeed a sore grievance, that affected him both in pride and purse. He was threatened with an absolute loss of the profits of his property, and then, what a blow to his territorial consequence to be the landlord of a haunted house!

It was observed, however, that with all his vexation the doctor never proposed to sleep in the house himself, nay, he could never be prevailed upon to remain in the premises after dark, but made the best of his way for town as soon as the bats began to flit about in the twilight. The fact was, the doctor had a secret belief in ghosts, having passed the early part of his life in a country where they particularly abound, and indeed the story went that when a boy he had once seen the devil upon the Hartz mountains in Germany.

At length the doctor's vexations on this head were brought to a crisis. One morning, as he sat dozing over a volume in his study, he was suddenly started from his slumbers by the bustling in of the housekeeper.

"Here's a fine to do!" cried she as she entered the room. "Here Chas Hopper comes in, bag and baggage, from the farm, and swears he'll have nothing more to do with it. The whole family have been frightened out of their wits, for there's such rackets and rummaging about the old house that they can't sleep quiet in their beds!"

"Donner and blitzen!" cried the doctor impatiently. "Will they never have done chattering about that house? What a pack of fools, to let a few rats and mice frighten them out of good quarters!"

"Nay, nay," said the housekeeper, wagging her head knowingly, and piqued at having a good ghost story doubted, "there's more in it than rats and mice. All the neighborhood talks about the house, and then such sights have been seen in it! Peter de Groodt tells me that the family that sold you the house and went to Holland dropped several strange hints about it, and said they wished you joy of your bargain," and you know yourself there's no getting any family to live in it."

Peter de Groodt's a nimny—an old woman," said the doctor peevishly. "I'll warrant he's been filling those people's heads full of stories. It's just like his nonsense about the ghost that haunted the church belfry as an excuse for not ringing the bell that cold night when Hardanus Benkenhoff's house was on fire. Send Claus to me."

Claus Hopper now made his appearance—a simple country lout, full of awe at finding himself in the very study of Dr. Knipperhausen, and too much embarrassed to enter into much detail of the matters that had caused his alarm. He stood twirling his hat in one hand, resting sometimes on one leg, sometimes on the other, looking occasionally at the doctor, and now and then stealing a fearful glance at the death's head that seemed ogling him from beyond the clothes press.

The doctor tried every means to persuade him to return to the farm, but all in vain, he maintained a dogged determination on the subject, and at the close of every argument or solicitation, would make the same brief, unbeatable reply, "Ich kan nicht, mynheer." The doctor was a little pot, and soon hot, but patience was exhausted by these continual vexations about his estate. The stubborn refusal of Claus Hopper seemed to him like flat rebellion, his temper suddenly boiled over, and Claus was glad to make a rapid retreat to escape scalding.

When the bumpkin got to the housekeeper's room, he found Peter de Groodt and several other true believers ready to receive him. Here he indemnified himself for the restraint he had suffered in the study, and opened a budget of stories about the haunted house that astonished all his hearers. The housekeeper believed them all, if it was only to spite the doctor for having received her intelligence so uncourteously. Peter de Groodt matched them with many a wonderful legend of the times of the Dutch dynasty, and of the devil's stepping stones, and of the pirate that was hanged at Gibbet Island, and continued to swing there at night long after the gallows was taken down, and of the ghost of the unfortunate Governor Leisler, who was hanged for treason, which haunted the old fort and the government house. The gossiping knot dispersed, each charged with direful intelligence. The sexton, disturbed himself at a vestry meeting that was held that very day, and the black cook forsook her kitchen, and spent half the day at the street pump, that gossiping place of servants, dealing forth the news to all that came for water. In a little time the whole town was in a buzz with its ears about the haunted house. Some said that Claus Hopper had seen the devil, while others hinted that the house was haunted by the ghosts of some of the patients whom the doctor had physicked out of the world, and that was the reason why he did not venture to live in it himself.

All this put the little doctor in a terrible fume. He threatened vengeance on any one who should affect the value of his property by creating popular prejudices. He complained loudly of thus being in a manner dispossessed of his territories by mere bugbears, but he secretly determined to have the house exorcised by the dominie. Great was his relief, therefore, when, in the midst of his perplexities, Dolph stepped forward and undertook to garrison the haunted house. The youngster had been listening to all the stories of Claus Hopper and Peter de Groodt, he was fond of adventure, he loved the marvelous, and his imagination had become quite excited by these tales of wonder. Besides, he had led such an uncomfortable life of the doctor's, being subjected to the intolerable thraldom of early hours, that he was delighted at the prospect of having a house to himself, even though it should be a haunted one. His offer was eagerly accepted, and it was determined that he should mount guard that very night. His only stipulation was, that the enterprise should be kept secret from his mother, for he knew the poor soul would not sleep a wink if she knew that her son was waging war with the powers of darkness.

When night came on, he set out on this perilous expedition. The old black cook, his only friend in the household, had provided him with a little mess for supper, and a rushlight, and she tied round his neck an amulet, given her by an African conjurer, as a charm against evil spirits. Dolph was escorted up his way by the doctor and Peter de Groodt, who had agreed to accompany him to the house and to see him safe lodged. The night was overcast, and it was very dark when they arrived at the grounds which surrounded the mansion. The sexton led the way with a lantern. As they walked along the avenue of acacias, the fitful light, catching from bush to bush, and tree to tree, often startled the doughty Peter, and made him fall back upon his followers; and the doctor grabbed still closer hold of Dolph's arm, observing that the ground was very slippery and uneven. At one time they were nearly put to a total rout by a bat which came flitting about the lantern; and the notes of the insects from the trees, and the frogs from a neighboring pond, formed a most dreary and doleful concert.

The front door of the mansion opened with a grating sound, that made the doctor turn pale. They entered a tolerably large hall, such as is common in American country houses, and which serves as a sitting room in warm weather. From hence they went up a wide staircase, that groaned and creaked as they trod, every step making its particular note, like the key of a harpsichord. This led to another hall on the second story, from whence they entered the room where Dolph was to sleep. It was large and scantily furnished, the shutters were closed, but as they were much broken there was no want of a circulation of air. It appeared to have been that sacred chamber known among Dutch housewives by the name of "the best bedroom," which is the best furnished room in the house, but in which scarce anybody is ever permitted to sleep. Its splendor, however, was all at an end. There were a few broken articles of furniture about the room, and in the center stood a heavy deal table and a large arm chair, both of which had the look of being coeval with the mansion. The fireplace was wide, and had been faced with Dutch tiles, representing Scripture stories, but some of them had fallen out of their places, and lay shattered about the hearth. The sexton had lit the rush light, and the doctor, looking fearfully about the room, was just exhorting Dolph to be of good cheer, and to pluck up a stout heart, when a noise in the chimney, like voices and struggling, struck a sudden pause into the sexton. He took to his heels with the lantern, the doctor followed hard after him, the stairs groaned and creaked as they hurried down, increasing their agitation and speed by its noises. The front door slammed after them, and Dolph heard them scrabbling down the avenue, till the sound of their feet was lost in the distance. That he did not join in this precipitate retreat, might have been owing to his possessing a little more courage than his companions, or perhaps that he had caught a glimpse of the cause of their dismay, in a nest of chimney swallows, that came tumbling down into the fire place.

Being now left to himself, he secured the front door by a strong bolt and bar; and having seen that the other entrances were fastened, he returned to his desolate chamber. Having made his supper from the basket which the good old cook had provided, he locked the chamber door and retired to rest on a mattress in one corner. The night was calm and still; and nothing broke upon the profound quiet but the lonely chirping of a cricket from the chimney of a distant chamber. The moonlight, which stood in the center of the deal table, shed a feeble yellow ray, dimly illumining the chamber, and making uncouth shapes and shadows on the walls, from the clothes which Dolph had thrown over a chair.

With all his boldness of heart, there was something subduing in this desolate scene, and he felt his sprite flag within him as he lay on his hard bed and gazed about the room. He was learning even in his mind his idle habits, his doubtful prospects and now and then heaving a heavy sigh, as he thought on his poor old mother, for there is nothing like the silence and loneliness of night to bring dark shadows over the brightest mind. By and by, he thought he heard a sound as if some one was walking below stairs. He listened and distinctly heard a step on the great staircase. It approached solemnly and slowly, tramp! tramp—tramp! It was evidently the tread of some heavy personage, and yet how could he have got into the house without making a noise? He had examined all the fastenings and was certain that every entrance was secure. Still the steps advanced tramp—tramp—tramp! It was evident that the person approaching could not be a robber—the step was too loud and deliberate, a robber would either be stealthy or precipitate. And now the footsteps had ascended the staircase, they were slowly advancing along the passage, resounding through the silent and unpeopled apartments. The very cricket had ceased its melancholy note, and nothing interrupted their awful distinctness. The door, which had been locked on the inside, slowly swung open, as if self moved. The footsteps entered the room, but no one was to be seen. They passed slowly and audibly across it, tramp—tramp—tramp! but whatever made the sound was invisible. Dolph rubbed his eyes and stared about him, he could see to every part of the dimly lighted chamber, all was vacant, yet still he heard those mysterious footsteps, solemnly walking about the chamber. They ceased, and all was dead silence. There was something more appalling in this invisible visitation than there would have been in anything that addressed itself to the eyesight. It was awfully vague and indefinite. He felt his heart beat against his ribs; a cold sweat broke out upon his forehead; he lay for some time in a state of violent agitation; nothing, however, occurred to increase his alarm. His light gradually burnt down into the socket, and he fell asleep. When he awoke it was broad daylight; the sun was peeping through the cracks of the window shutters, the birds were merrily singing about the house. The bright, cheery day soon put to flight all the terrors of the preceding night. Dolph laughed, or rather tried to laugh, at all that had passed, and endeavored to persuade himself that it was a mere freak of the imagination, conjured up by the stories he had heard, but he was a little puzzled to find the door of his room locked on the inside, notwithstanding that he had positively seen it swing open as the footsteps had entered. He returned to town in a state of considerable perplexity; but he determined to say nothing on the subject, until his doubts were either confirmed or removed by another night's watching. His silence was a grievous disappointment to the gossips who had gathered at the doctor's mansion. They had prepared their minds to hear direful tales, and they were almost in a rage at being assured that he had nothing to relate.

For painless extraction of teeth by the use of obtundent. Teeth can be filled and treated absolutely painlessly. All these good results are obtained, except and alone by the aid of my obtundent. Artificial teeth a specialty. I warrant my work ten years usage. All artificial teeth that are made by me are carved and baked under my supervision. Artificial crowns inserted and natural roots. Office kept open evenings for gentlemen. All appointments commendated by letter receive prompt attention.
